both sides agreed to continue meeting alternately in Moscow and Beijing.

Chinese officials here have said that the talks, the first between the two sides in three years, would probably resume early next year. They are aimed at removing the obstacles that have developed in relations between the two communist countries, once allies, over the last two decades.

On Thursday, Mr. Huang con-firmed that the next round of con-sultations, as the Chinese prefer to call them, would be held in Moscow and added that "the leaders of the two countries attach impor-tance to these consultations." When Mr. Huang was asked about their prospects, he replied: "I'm optimistic." Mr. Brezhnev's death has had the effect here of throwing into sharper focus a dialogue that has begun between China and the Soviet Union to seek out a more normal adversary relationship.

"There is a lot of movement, but substantively not much bas changed," the diplomat said. "The Chinese are still saying that we have to wait and see."

The Chinese leadership has not retreated from three key issues that it says must be resolved before normal relations can be realized between the two countries. It insists on a reduction of Soviet military forces along China's long bor-der with the Soviet Union and Mongolia, a Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan and an end to Moscow's support for the Vietnamese occupation of Cambo-

China's willingness to explore the possibility of improved relawith the Soviet Union in response to a series of overtures from the Kremlin appears to be part of an effort to define an independent foreign policy that will identify the Chinese with the Third

But Mr. Huang, before he left last Sunday for Moscow, main-tained that China was sincere about wanting to remove the impediments in its Soviet relations.

The Chinese people sincerely wish that there will be a genuine improvement in the relations between the two countries," Mr.

Mr. Huang also took the unusual step of praising Mr. Brezhnev as "an outstanding statesman of the Soviet Union," saying that "his death is a great loss to his country and his people." Mr. Brezhnev had in previous years been a prime target of Chinese propaganda broad-sides. At the same time, the Chinese have not visibly hudged from what they view as the major areas of disagreement. The Chinese press continues to give favorable coverage to the Afghan guerrillas fighting Soviet occupation forces.

Solidarity Seeks a Fresh Strategy, Conceding Failure of Strike Calls

By John Kifner New York Times Service

WARSAW - Underground Solidarity union leaders have conced-ed that their call for strikes and demonstrations last week was a near-total disaster and are groping about for a new strategy.

The current issue of the underground newspaper Tygodnik Ma-zowsze, the clandestinely distributed weekly of the Warsaw region.

calls the failure to mount a strike a "serious blow to the authority" of the underground leadership.

The strike was called for "in an atmosphere of general protest" over the outlawing of the independent trade union in early Octo-ber, the newspaper says, but "emo-tions had dropped" by the time the strike date arrived Nov. 10. The commentary provides an insight into the despair of the fugi-tive leaders of Solidarity, whose planned protest was snuffed out by a well-orchestrated campaign by Poland's martial law authori-

The government's tactics included a series of visible, publicized gestures as well as warnings to workers of swift rembution to those who struck, backed by a hage display of police force.

Most notable among the gestures was a meeting between the martial law leader, General Wojciech Jaruzelski, and the Roman Catholic leader, Archbishop Jozef Glemp. After the meeting, it was announced that Pope John Paul II would return in June to visit his homeland. Solidarity's five-man underground coordinating committee had called for an eight-hour nationwide strike last Wednesday. followed by "appropriate action"

Zbigniew Bujak called for a rally at the courthouse where Solidarity had been legally registered and a march to Victory Square. For the most part, the protests failed to materialize.

More protests, centering around the first anniversary of martial law on Dec. 13, had also been called. The strikes have been portrayed in clandestine leaflets as the first step in a series of tactics that would lead to a general strike, referred to as the "ultimate weapon," early next year.

Now, it appears, the underground leaders are being forced to rethink their strategy.
The action on Nov. 10 was to be an element of the radical program of struggle, a preparation for the decisive general strike in the

The phrase "long-term resist-ance" appeared to be a reference to a strategy of organizing an underground network prepared to struggle for years. Such action had been advocated by many dissident intellectuals.

Citing the failure of the underground coordinating committee's strategy, the commentary said: "For the first time, its position did not receive the support of the members of the union." One tactical problem, the commentary noted, was setting the strike so far in advance, which allowed the authorities to prepare. But the tactic was also dictated by the difficulty that the isolated, fragmented leadership appears to have in communications. Its networks have been broken up by the interning of about 600 top activists. and its structure — built up in the 15 months Solidarity operated openly — has been dismantled. Many activists were arrested in the weeks preceding the demonstration, not only further hampering organization, but casting a chill on potential support as well.

Contribed by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - A sudden slide in the value of the pound threatens to cast doubt on the Conservative government's claim to have infla-tion under control, officials say.

Officials described the draft directive as "an update" that would provide "additional insuragainst serious security breaches. Critics, including some military officers and Pentagon ci-vilians, contended that the Reagan administration was Irying to intimidate employees.

Critics argued that the draft directive would not only institutionalize the use of lie detector tests at the Pentagon, but also spread their use in other government departments that do not deal primarily in military or intelligence information. Pentagon officials would be authorized by the draft directive "to provide polygraph services to entities other than Department of Defense components" so long as they followed certain rules for administering the tests.

The draft directive already has been submitted to the Office of Personnel Management to determine whether it conforms to civil service rules. The agency has suggested some changes, including going further to inform people of their right to refuse a notwearch right to refuse a polygraph examination and to hire a lawyer before answering questions. Although lie detector tests are routinely administered to Central Intelligence Agency employees, they have never been institutionalized to the same extent at the Pentagon, which has three million people oo its full-time payroll, 2.1 million in uniform and 947,000 civil-

Deputy Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci, a former depu-ty director of the CIA, is a strong believer in the use of polygraphs. He ordered lie detector tests for Pentagoo officials last January in an unsuccessful attempt to find who disclosed to The Washington Post information about Pentagon cost estimates of President Ronald Reagan's arms huildup.

John Shattuck, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said after reading The Post's copy of the draft directive on use of the polygraph that it was the broadest I have ever seen.

If used in the unlimited fashion the directive appears to permit," said Mr. Shattuck, "it would allow an enormous invasion of the right of privacy of Defense Department employees, cootractors and even personnel in other government departments,"

A major difference between the 1975 directive oow in force and the draft directive is in the screening of employees. The current directive forbids using polygraphs "as a screening or selection device, as a condition of employment or as a routine part of personnel security investigations of such persons." Exceptions are made for military personnel assigned to the CIA and National Security Agency: The draft directive would require polygraph examinations for military, Defense Department and General Services Administration personnel "to assist in determining their eligibility for initial or continued employment, assignment or detail for duty" at the CIA, National Security Agency and De-fense Intelligence Agency.

Another difference is in aiding investigations. The current direc-tive states that "the polygraph shall be employed only as an aid to support other investigative techniques and be utilized generally only after the investigation by other means has been as thorough as circumstances permit."

The draft directive repeats that polygraphs should not be regarded "as conclusive in themselves" but appears far less restrictive in stating when they can be adminis-tered. Polygraph examinations could be given, for example, to investigate an alleged unauthor-ized disclosure of classified information or alleged acts of espionage, sahotage, treason, subversion, sedition or terrorism."

Some 300 federal agents have been assigned to a special drive to slow the flow of cocaine and marijuana smuggled into the United States through southern Florida. The president congratulated them oo the work they have done so far.

The task force has seized cocaine and marijuana with a retail, or street, value "estimated at more than an incredible $3 billion," Mr. Reagan said to an audience assembled in a giant hangar at the air base. The president had previously announced a $200-million nationwide drive to combat illegal drug activity in Los Angeles and 11 other cities. The program, based on the experience of the southern Florida task force, will concentrate on members of organized crime active in large-scale drug smuggling and distribution.

Edwin Meese 3d, the presidential counselor, told reporters that the administration would seek "new money" to finance the anti-crime task forces in the cities.

The success of the Florida task force demonstrates what can be accomplished by "aroused citizens and responsive officials who mean to make their county, their state and their country a place where decent law-abiding people can live without being victimized by career criminals and professional wroogdoers," the president told his audi-eace, which included members of a civic group, Miami Citizens Against Crime, and personnel of the special task force.

We condemn and are not willing to permit violent acts aimed at destabilizing governments, said a statement issued Wednesday by Presideot Roberto Suazo Córdova's international information office. The announcement came amid unconfirmed reports that the Hon-duran Army was dismantling camps used by the exiles aloog the

U.S. Ordered by Judge To Settle Indian Claims

WASHINGTON - A federal judge has ruled that the U.S. government failed to properly repre-sent American Indians to a wide variety of legal damage cases and ordered the Reagan administration to submit legislation or file law-suits to resolve 17,000 Indian claims, some of them a century

The claims range from the indi-vidual case of a Sioux Indian named Henry Rivers, who alleges that his father's land in Eagle Butte, South Dakota, was improperly lost through a 1935 tax sale, to that of the Covelo Indians of Mendocino County, California, whose land was taken without their consent for the construction of what is now California Highway 162.

The cases arose from alleged trespassing on Indian land, damage to Indian property, denial of ancestral fishing rights, breaches of contract and other improper taking of Indian property or mon-ey before 1966.

A U.S. District judge, Howard Corcoran, ruling here Wednesday in a class acoon lawsuit by Indians against administration officials. found that the government bad not obeyed a federal law requiring the United States, as trustee for indi-ans, to resolve these claims through court suits or legislatioo.

He ordered the government to submit legislation by Dec. 15 to re-solve the claims. For those claims that cannot be addressed in legislation, he ruled the government must file lawsuits to protect the rights of Congress had set a deadline of Dec. 31 for the government to file the suits. After that date, according to the lawsuit, unaddressed claims will be wiped out. In many of the claims, the gov-ernment is responsible for the damages, according to the lawsuit. Begin In Afghan War, a Leader's Death Sets Back Rebel Efforts

SOUTH OF KABUL, Afghanistan — Late in October. Abdul-Halim Khair Khawa, a major Afghan rebel commander, was killed as he led what was to have been the final assault on a key government military post in the center of Kabul, the capital of this Soviet-occupied country.

The death of the 25-year-old guerrilla lieutenant is considered a significant blow to Afghanistan's Islamic insurgents in their three-year war against the country's Soviet-backed Communist/government.

In a night attack on Oct. 27 that lasted well over two hours, the insurgents repeatedly fired recoilless rifle shells at a 50-man Afghan military post, simuted just below the Bala Hissar Fort housing 3,000 Soviet troops near the old city center.

Realizing after a while that only one heavy machine gun was still resisting his forces, Mr. Halim scaled the post's battered walls to silence it, only to be hit in the head by a bullet. He died instantly, and his death brought the operation to an immediate and chaotic

Unlike many of his fellow Mujahidin, or "warriors of God," Mr. Halim understood that in a guerrilla war the political mission of the insurgent was as important as his military one.

In frequent forays into the deserted, ill-lit streets of Kabul, Mr. Halim issued long, rousing appeals to his countrymen through the megaphone he invariably had by his side.

The attack last month on the Afghan Army post, oo more than 400 yards (364 kilometers) below the hilltop Bala Hissar Fort, was typical of Mr. Halim. He knew the dangers inherent in such an attack. Only hours before his death in the cutting cold of Oct. 28. Mr. Hamil acknowledged that Bala Hissar had

The attack was launched when a first shell from the recoilless rifle pierced the northern wall of the post in a cloud of dust and shattered cement, just before 11 P.M. on Oct. 27.

Almost immediately Mr. Halim turned to his mega-phone and sought to dissuade the Afghan soldiers inside the post from resisting their "Moslem brothers." Not only did they remain firmly entrenched behind their walls, they also put up staunch resistance. But while those in the post refused to budge, so too,

Soviet, Afghan Agencies Acknowledge Tunnel 'Accident'

MOSCOW - The official Soviet and Afghan news agencies ac-knowledged for the first time Thursday that there was a "road accident" in a tunnel at the Salang Pass in northern Afghanistan "a few days ago" and that there was "loss of life."

The report by the Bakhtar News Agency, which was carried by Tass, the Soviet agency, did oot specify the number of casualties or the circumstances of the accident.

When the Soviet troops did come to the aid of the Afghans, mortar and machine-gun fire rained down around the post, while three armored personnel carriers, their searchlights blazing, made their way down toward the insurgents.

But Mr. Halim had positioned men armed with antitank grenade launchers nearby. The first armored car sustained a direct hit and burst into flames; the other two immediately dimmed their lights and withdrew. Los Angeles Times Service. SEOUL - When President Kim II-Sung of North Korea visited China in April 1975, a time when South Vietnam. Cambodia and

It is not that Mr. Kim's recent visit to China, his closest military ally, lacked significance. Among the benefits Mr. Kim is believed to have obtained are:

• The first supply of MiG-21 jet fighters North Korea has received from either China or the Soviet Union, the North's other major military ally, since 1974. At least 20 and possibly as many as 40 MiG-21s, the most modern aircraft in North Korea's large but aging air force, were delivered, according to U.S., South Korean and Japacese officials.

 Apparent Chinese acceptance of, if not wholehearted blessing for the 70-year-old Mr. Kim's plan to have his son, Kim Jong-II, 40, succeed him in un-Communist, dy-astylike style.

Some kind of increased Chinese economic assistance, possibly in the form of a cash loan or more "Chinese-North Korean atoil supplies.

In 1975, the only visible gift President Kim received from the Chinese was a declaration recog-nizing his government as "the sole legal sovereign state of the Korean nation." In fact, no official Chinese contacts have developed with the Seoul government since then, although China has started indirect trade with South Korea. Yet in 1975 President Park Chung Hee of South Korea reacted by publicly declaring that Seoul would be defended "at any cost." as if fearing an imminent attack. In private, South Koreans spoke of concern that Mr. Kim might carry out some military probes against

This time, President Chun Doo Hwan, Mr. Park's successor, has spoken publicly only of a continuing, not an imminent, threat. Pritempts to cultivate intimate relations in the past haven't produced success which lasted more than a year or two, and the hopes for good relations produced by Kim's visit this time probably won't last long either," a senior South Korean intelligence officer said.

The difference in reactions appeared to stem from a near-reversal in diplomatic fortunes of North Korea and South Korea as well as a substantial change in their relative strength since 1975. In 1975, the U.S. will to help defend allies in Asia appeared to have dissipated after the fall of Saigon, North Korea, on the other hand, appeared to be on good terms with both China and the Soviet Union and was gaining on the South in a diplomatic battle to win recognition from developing coun-

34 Elephants Trek to Asian Games And a Place Outside the Spotlight

By William Claibome-

Washington Post Service NEW DELHI - After reluctantly making an uncomfortable eightday, 1,800-mile train journey from the tropical forests of southwestorn India for the opening of the ninth Asian Games here Friday, 34 majestic but cranky temple elephants have been downgraded to bit players in the sports spectacu-

Faced with a myriad of potennally embarrassing problems with the elephants' appearance before 80,000 spectators at the newly built Jawaharial Nebru Studium including the unexpected early arrival of the annual mating season for some of the behemoths — Asian Games security officials have quietly revised the program for the opening ceremony, which will be presided over by Prime Minister

Indira Gandhi Instead of performing the full ritual of the traditional Trichur Festival Parade common to their native state of Kerala, the elepliants apparently will stand plac-idly in a semicircle at the entrance of the stadium and comprise what K.T. Satarawala, vice chairman of the Games' organizing committee, called "part of the overall pageantry and decoration."

Owners of the elephants said they had thought the animals would be a central performing attraction of the Asian Games, upon which the Indian government has spent hundreds of millions of dollars in an investment in national

Moreover, some of the elephants will be heavily tranquilized to min-imize "masting," or symptoms of being seasonally in heat, their handlers said. Animal protection activisis have charged that some of the beasts have also been given large doses of drugs to constipate them so they will not not defecate during the televised ceremony.

For weeks, the odyssey of the Kerala elephant troupe has been a source of fascination and curiosity for many Indians, and an object of almost daily controversy in the Indian press.

The Asian Games organizers

have been accused by their critics of mismanagement and extrava-gance in squandering money for what is alleged to be an exercise in vanity by the Kerala government, and the elephants owners have been charged — unfacetiously — by the Society for Prevention of Cruelty of Animals with carting the animals here under "inhuman conditions."

Most of the elephants have been trained to perform in religious fes-tivals at Hindu temples in Kerala, although some are working ele-phants used by lumber firms. They were donated by the Kerala government, which presumably foresaw some public relations benefit in the gesture.

At the elephants' camp site in an idyllic, tree-shaded deer park near the Asian Games complex, Girinathan Nair, assistant director of Kerala's animal husbandry department, said in an interview, "We've had some problems, yes. But oothing we didn't anticipate. This is the largest elephant transport in the fortunate we haven't had more

He conceded that some of the pachyderms, including 45-year-old Kutikirshnan, a five-ton, ninefoot tusker, were in heat and potentially too dangerous to use in the opening ceremony because of their "slightly aggravated state." mile (eight-kilometer) trek to Nehru Stadium Friday, accompa-nied by 110 mahouts, or handlers, and perform as promised even through their routine has been modified, Mr. Nair said.

He denied that massive injections of drugs had been given to the elephants to constipate them for the performance, and said only "normal" amounts of tranquilizers had been used to calm the most

by Waverley Root

ARIS — It dawned on me only in 1965, when I read Henry Miller's introduction to the catalog of an exposition of paintings by his friend (and mine) Abraham Rattner that Miller had only one subject, and it was not the one you are thinking of: It was

The catalog introduction was titled "A Word About Abraham Rattner." but it read more like "A Word oo the Contribution of Abraham Rattner to the Importance of Henry Miller." I was curious enough to count the lines in which Miller was mendoned and those in which Rattner was and though the subject of the article was allowed a majority of the mentions — 53 about Rattner — there were 32 for Miller, who thus appeared as a rather intrusive admirer.

I did not know when I delivered myself to this mathematical divertissement that Miller had already emphasized his importance as his own subject when the critic Edmand Wilson complimented him for his skillful portrayal of a character in one of his books — "for making this bero really live.... the genuine American burn come to lead the beautiful life

"The theme of the book," Miller ungratefully retorted, "... is not at all what Mr. Wilson described; the theme is myself, and the narrator is also myself... I have painstakingly indicated throughout the book that the bero is myself. I don't use 'heroes,' incidentally, nor do I write novels. I am the hero and the book is myself."

I would say that this applies to almost everything Miller has written:
All his books are about himself. Those I have read were written in the first person. There may be some which are not, but even so I cannot imagine Miller being able to write anything which would not have a firstperson leeling.

Within the framework of Henry Miller's narcissistic preoccupation with himself, the aspect of his subject which most interests him - indeed, sometimes almost exclusively — is of course the sexual aspect, in its least sublimated form. His concentration on the rawest, crudest, emptiest, physical manifestations of sex, in harmony with the pleasure he takes in the squalid in other domains as well, strikes me as betraying a lack of comprehension and of appreciation for the beauty of sexual relationships.

I remember starting one of his books years ago ("Tropic of Cancer" perhaps?) and abandoning it after the third or fourth organ because of its monotony. One orgasm, after all, is very much like another; it is the attendant circumstances which transfigure some of them, but Miller does not seem to be sensitive to attendant circumstances. I prefer a little more poetry with my sex.

Sex paid off. Miller became a success when he gave the public what the public was willing to pay for. Yet be does not strike me as a voluptuary or even a libertine. The high priest of sexual enjoyment does not enjoy sex. Love for him was not a bringer of joy, but of defilement: It was not uplifting, but debasing; it was not liberating, but imprisoning; it was not light, but heavy.

Miller represents the literature of disgust, and one of the things which disgusted him was sex. When he writes, in "Tropic of Cancer," "I looked around and there stood a brazen wench, leaning against her door like a lazy slut, cigarette between her lips, sadly rouged and frizzled, old, scarred, cracked, evil greedy eyes." is this the language of a worshiper of Venus or of a shocked, sex-starved, revivalist preacher? "He really was puritanical," Wambly Bald wrote. He was not in revolt against a puritanism which forbade enjoyment of sex, he was a nurium provided by sex. ism which forbade enjoyment of sex, be was a puritan revolted by sex.

I do not suppose that anyone will dispute the statement that Miller was obsessed by sex. But why? It is a question which intrigued me, and I sought for the answer in his works — in what critics would call the internal evidence — trying to avoid the obvious conclusion, the one almost inevitable in these post-Freudian days, that Miller's obsession with sex was the obsession of frustration, that he perpetrated sexual exploits in his head because he could not do so in bed. No other explanation seemed to hold water.

Later, in the United States, his affairs and his marriages would be notorious, but they fall into a different context, a context which does not necessarily imply a history of sexual relations satisfactorily maintained. After he became notorious, his liaisons could have been love affairs or they could have been fame affairs. In any case, in his Paris days, in the period before he became famous, and in a place where the satisfaction of sexual desire was rampant and everybody knew who was s whom, we encounter no such gossip about Miller. He seems to have been

I myself, after our Brooklyn meeting of 1926, never once saw him with a girl. It is true that I did not see him often, but while the other proofreaders sometimes showed up at Gillotte's restaurant with a girl in tow, Henry never did. It might have been expected that at some of those early-morning meetings with Miller, Bald and Alfred Perlès - all depicted in "Cancer" as great womanizers — they might bave had a girl along, if they were addicted to girls: there never was one. Indeed during the whole Paris period, one never bears of Miller and a woman, except Anais

Nin; and this was a very special case.

With or without reliable witnesses, we bave circumstantial evidence which makes it difficult to accept Miller's portrait of himself as a great

In his preface to the catalog of the Abraham Rattner exposition, Miller, writing as usual of himself on the pretext of writing about somebody else, exclaimed: "How often, at the end of a day spent in riotous living, I thought of Rattner, his perseverance, his tenacity, his discipline, his devotion to his work!" Miller's days of riotous living were, in my opinion, a myth, and so were the orgies in his books.

He was, in the first place, devoted to his work also, though be seems to have been ashamed to admit a habit so respectable as toil. Miller worked all the time, Richard Osborn said. When Miller lived with him, Osborn left 10 francs on his bedside table every morning, which Miller paid for, in a way, by producing every day what amounted to a sizable sheaf of pages by the time Osborn returned in the evening.

In the second place, Miller's orgies could not have existed, except at the rarest of intervals, because he couldn't afford them.

I am sure that Miller did not "spend most of his time laying waste the brothels of Paris." Brothels are business enterprises, highly profitable ones, with a bard-headed attitude towards money. They do not object to being laid waste, in the sense in which I understand the term is being used bere, providing the customer is able to pay for it; but they are not in the habit of extending credit. No doubt Henry did get to see the inside of a brothel once or twice, at shocking others, but be did not have the means to frequent them regularly. Street prostitutes charge for their services too, though some of them do not charge very much. Their usual habit is to collect their fees in advance, a wise precaution, as the merchandise they sell is not, in the case of nonpayment, repossessable.

It is interesting to note, incidentally, that when Miller writes of his relacions with women, it is only when he is dealing with prostitutes that his accounts ring true; and in the gossip of the time, we find him mentioned only with prostitutes. We may suppose that he did, occasionally, get together enough money for commercial love, but since he was so poor, why did he pay for it? There were plenty of hospitable girls about, ready to cooperate for no reward except their own pleasure, with any agreeable, normally constituted young man.

In a society so endowed, what sort of young men, especially poor young men, would pass up the opportunities opened freely to them and spend their money on prostitutes, except perhaps ooce in a while, to enjoy the thrill of wickedness? The question answers itself: young men who were not normally constituted or thought they were not, young men who feared the humiliation of failure with a girl they had charmed into bed (who might even be talkarive enough to spread the shameful news around). With a prescriptive if dich; matter around). With a prostitute it didn't matter.

The one known "affair" in Miller's Paris life which did not involve a prostitute was that with Anais Nin, and I put "affair" in quotation marks for I do not know if it has been alleged that there was any actual physical love between them, or if their relationship is supposed to bave been platonic. Indeed, if either or both had said it was either one or the other, I would not know whether to believe it or not.

other, I would not know whether to believe it or not.

In the case of Henry and Anais Nin particularly, though I do have a little material written by others, my theories — I will not call them conclusions — are derived from my own observation of the principals (in only a small part, for I saw little of either of them), from my own acquaintance with people who knew them well and whom I knew well, from that information which because of my own position as book reviewer of the Paris Edition of the Chicago Tribune gravitated naturally to me, from my knowledge of the whole dramatis personae of the period and of the background against which they performed.

I can believe easily of both Henry Miller and Anais Nin that they were capable of acting out a heady romance, and taking great pleasure in doing so, in words alone; indeed I find it easier to imagine them as simulating passion, comfortably, in their writings, than of actually succumbing to it; that would bave been real, and both of them were prophets of the imaginary.

And besides, neither of them even looked capable of a full-blooded

Anais Nin, in her pre-Miller days, struck me as mousy. She did not emerge from the background: She was a piece of the furniture. Henry sank into the scenery too. When I try to evoke his physical appearance. even today, one or the other of two common French phrases pops un-sought into my mind. One is "colorless and odorless," the other is "wallcolored" - in short, someone who would blend with the background and go completely unnoticed.

If I cannot imagine either Henry Miller or Anais Nin writhing in the throes of a grand passion, I have no trouble at all in seeing them includeing themselves up to the hilt in a make-believe one. They were enamored of words, not acts. Both were possessed by logorrhea, both poured out torrents of breathless prose in a sort of catharsis, I could not cast them as Heloise and Abelard, but they could, and do it all in language.

The flow of Anais Nin's prose was snaver, but it was interminable, like Henry's a building up, but a building up by endurance rather than by fury, like an African jungle chant which, continued all night long, repetitious, monotonous, in the end exhausts the singers.

A strange combination, Anais and Henry — two persons obsessed by sex whose physical relations may have been sexless; two persons considered as libertines who may in fact, except on paper, bave lived rather uneventful sexual lives — strange, but not unheard of: Indeed I am almost tempted to call it typical of the scandal-loving evangelists of sex. Or should we assume that Miller acquired fame not primarily as an apostle of unbridled sex, but because be overwhelmed the reading public by the quality of his writing? I fear I do not rate Miller very high as a writer, and it is certainly not his sexual "frankness" (I put the word in quotation marks because I do not believe he was frank) which puts me off. This was the opinion I had of Miller's writing when be first burst upon the firmament, and it is my

I have no other basis for appraising Miller's literary importance than by reading what he wrote, and for me it does not all add up to greatness. It seems to me that the general opinion about Miller is now calming toward what was my original position. Many of those who were dazzled n the deginning so importance since.

If Miller is not a major figure, and I do not think be is, then bow did it happen that he achieved such fame? It is my opinion, as a writer whose first book was published more than half a century ago, that the success or non-success of books is to a very large extent the result of chance. Miller's greatest luck was perfect, though accidental, timing. His first succès de scandule was published at a time when it could still make an explosive impact on a puritanical world. Today, when anything goes, it would have little punch. The powers that be did "Cancer" the favor of banning it; that gave it the attractiveness of the illicit. A few copies at a time reached the United States in the bags of tourists returning from Paris, who had been charged by avid friends with buying this titillating book for them. Those who succeeded in getting hold of it gave themselves airs over those who had not.

Meanwhile Miller was keeping his notoriety alive by producing other books of the same stripe, also obtainable only in Paris. The ban on "Tropic of Cancer" was lifted only in 1962 — 28 years after it had first been published. Most books are dead in less time than that, and perhaps 'Cancer" would have been too without the censor's help.

There was of course a rusb to huy it when it was finally available, and the timing was still good; the United States had not yet emerged sufficiently from its puritanism to be disappointed by the book, as could bave been the case later. Besides, the whole Montparnasse period had become romantic, Miller along with it, perhaps the most romantic tigure of all. because to some extent the most mysterious and, thanks to his own account of his experiences, the most scandalous.

He benefited also by other elements, some fortuitous, some not. He was perseverant, an important asset; be got himself published even though be bad to pay for it, or persuade friends to pay for it. Finally, when "Cancer" was finished, 1932, his was the only coterie left in Paris. He belonged to the second generation of Montparnasse - after the Stock Market crash. The first generation - that which included Scott Fitzgerald and Ernest Hemingway - existed before the Stock Market crash. There was more competition then.

After 1932 Miller might almost be said to have had Montparnasse to himself. He was the last beir of its glamour, and he reaped the benefit of FW YORK - There is a bit of hypoorisy in my attitude toward game. On the one hand I am quite uncomfortable around shotguns, rods and reels, but on the other I yield without hesitation to well-made venison dishes, pates of qualf, roast pheasant, roast qualf, qualf in vine leaves or with grapes, Offer me a planter of venison Bourguignon with a rich old bottle of Chambertin and it will turn any cold winter day's feast into a sumptuous occasion.

It occurs to me, however, that no aspect of cookery is more infimidating to home cooks than turning a piece of game into a triumph for the table. It is true that some game tastes best if it is allowed to do what the French call getting faisande, or "high." French and English epicures, in particular, like to hang game until it takes on an unmistakably gamy taste.

Unlike me, Pierre Francy is a skilled himter and he has also had many years' experience in and he has also bad many years' experience in preparing game for the table. It is his theory that hanging and aging game are not absolutely essential but are preferable (very small birds such as doves and quails do not demand hanging). The length of time varies from overnight for birds such as partridge to seven days or longer for a deer. Needless to say, a cool or somewhat cold place is essential. The temperature should be 40 degrees or less but not suffi-Cient to cause freezing.

One does not have to marinate all game before cooking, either. When game is marinated, the length of time will depend on the type of the cut. A leg of venison may marinate for as long as a week in the refrigerator, being turned frequently in the mari-nade, which might consist of wine, generally red, a touch of vinegar, herbs and spices such as bay leaf, thyme, parsley, peppercoms and rosemary, plus such ebopped vegetables as carrots, omons and celery.

EW YORK - When the violinist Yehudi Menuhin comes to New York the first thing be does is call his favorite natural-food store and place an order: porridge, yogurt, goat's milk, sprouted wheat bread, ice cream, butter, fruits, vegetables, tofu sandwiches and kefir. In each American city where he performs, Menuhin has a favorite place to shop, making his life as a traveling vegetarian more comfortable.

Being a vegetarian in a largely carnivorous society has often meant second-class gastronomic citizenship. Until recently, even friends would smirk when a vegetarian announced a preference for a meatless diet. In many restaurants the only alternative to the standard meal was, and often still is, overcooked gray-green vegetables or a tossed salad made mostly of lettuce. A decade ago vegetarian restaurants were few and far between in the United States and what they served was often no more appetizing than gummy brown rice and wilted

But the situation has improved significantly in the last few years, say a number of people who attempt to follow one version or another of a vegetarian diet. The improvement results, in part at least, from the increase in the number of people who call themselves vegetarians. There are now too many of them to be ignored. The Vegetarian Information Service estimates the figure in the United States alone at 7 million to 12 million.

There is a general increased awareness of the health value of eating more vegetables, fruits and grains, and a serious effort is being made to prepare them well. Vegetarian cookbooks have become increasingly popular and vegetarian restaurants, serving well-seasoned food that also appeals to nonvegetarians who have discovered bow good meatless meals can be. have sprung up.

Most vegetarians eat the same things that other people ear, with the exception of meat.

Menuhin describes himself as "self-indulgent" about certain foods. He can eat an entire boneycomb at four breakfasts, "I collect honey the way some people collect stamps," Menuhin says. He is particularly food of Indian food because it is "so stimulating and so delicious, the vegetables with all the spices and the dairy products, the flat bread, rice and the masses of fruit." Menuhin loves pasta, especially with pesto and white truffles. He also enjoys fine

Vegetarians generally fall into two groups: There are lacto-ovos, who eat eggs and milk products but no meat, and vegans, who eat no meat, eggs or milk products. In recent years the definition has loosened somewhat and now many people who eat fish and chicken but no red meat call themselves vegetarians. The magazine Vegetarian Times describes vegetarians as those who stick to a diet eschewing flesh of all kinds with occasional allowances for buman weaknesses.

Why do people become vegetarians? During the last decade health has been an overriding concern. When the medical community began preaching the virtues of exercise and a low-fat, low-cholesterol diet, some people took up exercise and gave up meat.

ILAN - In London, the serious shopper searches for antiques. In Paris, the quest is for food and fashion. The knowledgeable visitor to Milan doesn't leave the city without picking up some shoes. It is not simply that shoe trends originate io Milan and that the styles purchased in any shop on the Via Monte Napoleone, for instance, will show up in any world capital six months later. It is also that the shoes are generally well-made and enduring so that even classic styles are well worth the money.

No one understands value better than the people in the fashion business who descend on Milao en masse twice a year - ooe week at the beginning of October and another in mid-March - to attend seasonal ready-to-wear shows. Many of them make a point of heading for the shoe shops before they even unpack their luggage. They have discovered that if they wait a day the stacks of shoes in their size and their favorite styles will be seriously diminished: the other fashion followers will have gotten there first.

The shop I favor happens to be Raphael-Rossetti on the Via Monte Napoleone, but it is fun to find your own. There are hundreds of shoe stores in Milan. from the Gucci and Ferragamo shops to lesser-known places that offer either trendy or sophisticated styles. Prices are usually marked in the windows. Just head for the center of the city and start to marked in the windows. Just head for the center of the city and start to walk. You are sure to find something that strikes your eye.

One place to start on a shoe-walking tour is an unprepossessing store called Pozzi at 31 Via Manzoni, at the intersection with the Via Pisoni and not far from the public gardens (Giardini Pubhlici). A young woman I know in the advertising husiness whose work takes ber to Milan periodically always stops at Pozzi for low-heeled plastic pumps. They have unobtrusive details such as tiny tassels in the front or touches of contrasting colors around the rim. She bought two pairs this fall and people frequently ask her where she got them, she says. They cost about 60,000 lire (roughly $40) each.
Follow the Via Manzoni to the Piazza della Scala. The opera house will be on your right as you cut diagonally across the square, bearing left. Go through the galleria, the shopping arcade with high cast-iron and flat-domed roof, and turn left when you come to the Corso Vittorio Emanuele. You will see the Duomo on your right. At the intersection of Vittorio Emanuele with the Via San Paolo, you will find Bruno Magli, a shop where the calfskin shoes are as shiny as patent leather and where lizard-trimmed pumps cost under 150,000 lire. Suede boots with decorative calf inlays are almost twice as expensive but they look worth it.

Cootinue along the Corso Vittorio Emanuele and you will pass other stores carrying classic shoes for both men and women. When you reach the Corso Matteotti, a quarter of a block farther, where the Via Monte Napoleone begins, you will find my favorite shop, Rossetti. It is offering sturdy walking shoes with fringed flaps for about 130,000 lire this season. Just past it on the Via Monte Napoleone is Santini & Dominici, a favorite of young Italians for its trendy, amusing styles. Short boots with nailheads and lizard pumps in unlikely colors with pointy toes and heels are featured this season for roughly 150,000 lire a pair.

A few steps down the street at No. 3 is Tanino Crisci, with a good supply of shiny leather moccasins at about the same price. Next door, at No. 5 Via Monte Napoleone, Gueci shows moccasins with suede inserts

Turn right onto the Via Borgospesso, a narrow medieval street with antique shops to look in at and, at No. 18, a shoe store worth investigating called Sebastian. The best sellers at this shop are modified cowboy boots studded with coral and turquoise stones and priced at around

When the Via Borgospesso ends, turn right onto the Via della Spiga, one ol Milan's most fashionable shopping streets, where people-watching is as much fun as window-shopping in the stores of Gianni Versace, Krizia and other of the city's leading fashion designers.

Where the Via della Spiga intersects the Via Sant'Andrea, Carrano is selling low-heeled patent-leather pumps with ankle straps, a trendy Mary Jane, for about 90,000 lire. This is one of the stores favored by fashion people seeking new style directions. Just across the street on the Via Sant'Andrea is Fendi with its traditionally superb workmanship and higher prices. One of its specialties is suede dyed in hlurred, Impressionist shades. A low-heeled pump in this material costs about 150,000 lire Continue down the Via Sant'Andrea and you will find Guido Pasquali one of the new style leaders in Milan. A pump with pointy wings at the throat in three different leather textures is about 225,000 lire. Go back along Sant'Andrea, pass the shops of Chioe and Calvin Klein, turn left onto the Via della Spiga and follow it to the end. You will be back on the Via Manzoni, near where you began.

The walk, at a leisurely pace, takes about two hours and passes some of the city's landmarks. Most of the stores open at 9 A.M. and close around noon; they reopen at 3 and remain open until about 7 P.M. So plan your tour for the morning (except Mondays, when many are closed) or the afternoon hours, Monday through Saturday.

Searching for a Lost Army 25 Centuries Later

OSTON - A Boston writer has decided to look for a Persian army of 50,000 men that disappeared in a andstorm in the Sahara 25 centuries ago. Gary Chafetz, 35, says he has the money and the tools - a radar unit pulled by camels - to find "the lost army of Camhyses."

Chafetz says his search next spring will center on a 185-square-mile (479-square-kilometer) area of Egyptian desert south of Siwa, the ancient site of the temple of Amon. The area. in western Egypt, is near the Libyan border.

Chafetz decided to look for the missing army while doing research for a novel. He says he has $100,000 hudgeted to support his search and has received encouragement from scholars at Harvard and the University of Arizona.

According to the Greek historian Herodotus. the army was dispatched in 525 B.C. by Cambyses II, the king of Persia and son of Cyrus the Great, who had conquered Heliopolis and Memphis. The army, which was assigned to sack the temple site, vanished along with its coocubioes, children, tools and weapons,

"A southerly wind of extreme violence drove the sand over them in heaps as they were taking their midday meal, so that they disappeared forever," Herodotus wrote.

Chafetz believes the army was engulfed by the khamsin, hurricane-force winds that sweet the Sahara each March and April. He believe the army's remains may be found about 50 miles (80 kilometers) south of Siwa, in an area marked by huge cairns - rock piles erected to mark paths in the wilderness.

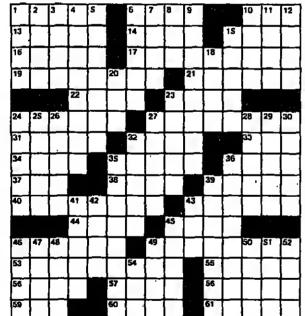

He has visited the site with members of the Egyptian Geological Survey, which will spon-Italian television crew.

a special radar unit over the sand in hopes of detecting the army's remains.

Bermuda, a Sailor's Snug Harbor

by Christian Williams

: AMILTON, Bermuda - if the landfall is by day, the island appears first as a mere smudge on the horizon; by night, however, it shines from afar, marked by the twin beacons of Gihh Hill and St. David's Light.

Sometimes it's a bone-weary crew who pass through Town Cut at dawn, after bombardment by a squall-soaked night, to kiss the ground at St. George. But another time you coast in under the biggest spinnaker, pulling a cloud of nylon down at Spit Buoy, the skipper pouring cham-

Bermuda — for a sailor, it's a grand landfall: 650 miles out from the United States across a progressively bluer, warmer and more friendly Atlantic. The influent Guif Stream is now forgonen; for the last 100 miles, the King's English urges you on from radio station Zed BM; within 50 miles the first Bermuda longtail appears in the sky, flitting velcoming circles around the mast.

After four or five days' sailing (or maybe eight or nine days in a 25-footer with no engine), the island appears, right where the sextant said. Or should have said.

Not every sailor in Bermuda has sailed there, of course. But whether he arrives by plane, cruise stip or yacht, the place endlessly reminds the visitor of the sea around it. So it may be argued that a great lot of tennis should not be played on Bernuda, nor flowers endlessly surveyed; we should indulge instead, while there, in oceanic endeavors.

 Wangle a ride on a fitted dinghy. This should not be a difficult achievement. Fitted dinghies are 14-font keelboats with long bowsprits and three sizes of masts - a very tall mast for light air, another mast for medium air, etc. Each of the yacht clubs has a fitted dinghy and they race in the harbor for the prettiness of it and the tradition.

Although it helps greatly to know someone or to be extremely rich, hanging about on race day could just result in an invitation to crew, especially if you happen to be a former Olympic sailor. Because crewmen are encouraged to jump overboard as the dinghies approach the finish line, count on being the first to go. Cronch on the stern, wait for the skipper's command, and give a good push with the legs in departing to thrust your comrades on. Don't worry, some spectator boat will pick you up and towel you down.

In any case, inquire "when the fitted dinghies race," and try to be

Ride no moped. The rental of mopeds, or pedal-assisted motorbikes, is a flourishing business on Bermuda, and considered part of island lore. They are also the sole source of a local malady known as "road rash," which is caused by falling off them.

You may be a motocross champ; but it is likely that at least one member of your party will not be much at home on a moped and will not enjoy negotiating heavy, wrong-way traffic along winding lanes with oleander-covered sheer coral walls. Why rent a moped when taxis are more civilized, buses more social, and the Bermuda harbor ferry more of

• Rent a sailboard. The harbor ferry in Hamilton will take you to Paget, across the sound, from which it is a five-minute walk to a pleasant landing offering Windsurfer and Dufour models. The water is so extravagantly bine, and the sights of Hamilton harbor so giddy, that even the splash-and-flail level of sailboarding is rewarding. The fee is about $10

ong Theane And Bear in mind if the wind is blowing into the little cove where the rental landing is, you'll have to tack your way ont. Boardsailing is something like riding a bicycle: To learn, you must be prepared to fall. Take instruction or read up carefully, go in the morning when there's no wind or chop and leave the afternoon free. Afterward, you'll need a nap.

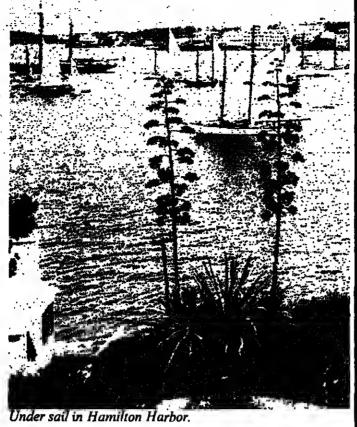

Assume the worst about yourself. You will look ridiculous in Bermuda shorts, stockings, tie and blazer, although the natives look quite dashing. Most restaurants will expect a blazer, and a tie is not a bad idea. When introduced to a Bermudian, use his or ber entire first name in response. (Frederick becomes "Fred" rather slowly in Bermuda; and occasionally it never becomes "Fred" at all.) If invited for cocktails at the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club, bear in mind that women drink only in its Women's Annex. The Royal Hamilton Amateur Dinghy Club, on the other hand, invites women up to the bar with the men. Bermuda is a small island, the traditions are British and a certain formality is expected. Should you try riding a hicycle with your shirt off, be prepared to be told by a cab driver to put one on.

indent Red as in acquaintance of a boatyard. Charlie Loder's in Red Hole next to the Hamilton Dinghy Club is a wonderful one. It is rather small, and there is from for only one or two world cruisers up on the skids, and otherwise it offers nothing to see but Charlie Loder. However, if your rudder has fallen off- it is a mighty nice place, and Charlie Loder a mighty nice fellow, to get acquainted with Make the acquaintance of a boatyard. Charlie Loder's in Red Hole Beaches, surf and bathing. Many ocean sailors are uncomfortable around surf. To them, surf is something you listen for with your beart in your mouth while sailing through the fog with no idea what the four-knot current has done to your course. Then somebody yells "Surf!" and you spin the wheel with your hair standing on end and go hack the way

Even so, Horseshoe Bay is a knockout. It lies a half-hour by bus from Hamilton, where the Atlantic rolls onto a speciacular half-circle of pure white sand and the water is crystal clear and bathtub warm. It is a postcard come to life, and if you can look at the surging reefs without thinking what they would do to a sailboat's hull, there is no prettier place

 Where in stay, if not on a yacht. Many visiting boats arrange to stay at one of the several yacht clubs, thereby assuring showers and electricity. It is more pleasurable, I think, to anchor out in Hamilton Harbor, commuting by dinghy to downtown. You may not even need the dinghy, as the harbor ferry will often pick you up and take you home if not ton

Otherwise, a private cottage is nicest, perhaps in Paget. You can share a cottage and be spared the traffic bustle of Hamilton. The ferry then becomes town transit. Many sailors stay at the Princess Hotel in Hamil-

 Fishing. It should not be hard in go fishing once in Bermuda, but it may be hard to do it on the way down. Sailing and fishing traditionally do not go together, supposedly because fish blood stains teak. In olden say, 1959 -- skippers made a great show of forhidding it. Now that decks are fiberglass, skippers still make a show of forbidding it. The reason is that they never catch anything.

If your skipper is one of those, obtain the article titled "Catching the Big Fish" by Robert J. Westervelt in the April 1982 issue of Sail magazine. Following his advice this summer, we caught a 15-pound wahon 300 miles out. The skipper was unhappy about the blood, but after one mouthful of raw wahoo he was transported.

• Dreaming, Of course, it often happens that one's companions in Bermuda are more interested in playing tennis, dining like kings, reading paperback novels, going to the discotheque, and sleeping late (a tragic mistake on a hrief vacation) than they are in the bounty of the water surrounding them,

So while they are asleep, it is a good time to visit the customs dock in St. George. There, with luck, you will find the long-distance sea travelers established in a little bevy hard hy the quay.

There may perhaps be an ungainly little tuh from Durban, headed round the world, next to a Westsail 32 from Florida, adjacent to a doughty English family drying their mattresses after punching across the pond from Bristol. You may circulate among them, perhaps strike up a conversation, certainly learn something about the sort of folks for whom Bermuda is not a vacation weekend, but a week's layover in the cruising

In 1975, there was a fellow from Sweden tied up near the customs dock. He had a funny and clustered tittle boat, from which hung a sign that read "Woman Crew Wanted." We bought him drinks and so did everyone else, for he was tired of sailing alone and craved companion-ship of the feminine kind. He had a very long beard and he smelled like a

The next morning he gravely painted over the first word of his sign.

Almost immediately a young fellow turned up, and off they went at three knots toward some distant shore. 01982 The Washington Past

An Egyptian Oasis in the Nile

by William E. Farrell

AIRO - Travel in Egypt can be exhausting — the heat, the overwhelming crowds in teeming Cairo, the long descents and ascents into the wonderful tombs of places like the Valley of the Kings. There comes a time when a traveler, at least one with time to spare, will crave some-thing that Cairo, for all its variety cannot provide —quiet. Elephantine Island, situated in the Nile within viewing distance of Aswan, seems the perfect place to spend three or four days doing nothing with a vengeance. From Ocinber through the end of April, the climate is perfect. Hot sunny days, cool even-ings, peerless blue skies that make the Nile amer like silver. The summer months are very hot, but the heat is a dry one and not unbearable. I spent several days on the island to escape the noise and congestion of Cairo and rest before touring the glories of Ahu Sim-

Elephantine Island is less than a mile long and a third of a mile wide at its thickest point. Its main attraction for me, after months of being stalled in Cairo traffie or dodging maniacal drivers as a pedestrian, is that it has no cars, only two vans that the single hotel on the island, the Aswan Oberoi, uses to transport your luggage from a ferry to your room.

The two hotel ferries are in the fluted design of the ancient reed boats of the pharaohs. You step from the boat inm a gorgeous sanctuary, landscaped with flowers, bougainvillea, flame trees and palms.

Standing on the island, you can see Aswan on the right bank of the Nile and on the left bank, beyond the blonus and gardens of Elephantine, you can see silky sand dunes that mark the beginning of a vasi desert.

The Aswan Oberoi, run by an Indian firm, is one of the best botels in Egypt. All 150 rooms have halconies with fine views and the rooms are air-conditioned and comfortable. The service, by the sometimes erraric standards of Egypt, is quite good. Not architecturally distinctive, the hotel is spread out over three floors (a boon in Egypt where elevainrs are chancy) but the lack of adornment enhances its natural surroundings The major flaw is that someone saw fit to build a tall tower in the middle of the complex — a structure that is utterly useless and creates an unnecessary intrusion into the area's modest skyline. But the locals regard the tower as a

The Oberoi has a bandsome green and white dining room, a comfortable har done in dark wood and soft lights, and a nightclub. There is a large swimming pool girded by tables and umbrellas and an outdoor grill that is a perfect place to have hunch after lazing in the sun. The pool is a fine spot for reading until the shadows start to fall and there is a sudden, startling desert sunset that is as spectacular as it is brief.

Swingers beware: Elephantine Island's nocturnal amusements are the antithesis of earsplitting discos, although the nightclub has a belly dancer. But the spirit of the place is best caught by a drink, a good dinner, an evening stroll and early to bed.

The food is good, not great, and the menu offers daily specials such as roast suckling pig along with such standards as curry dishes, kabobs, steaks, mixed grills, fish and lamb chops. The service is pleasant and the staff tries and succeeds in pleasing a guest. The prices vary, but two can have a decent meal for the equivalent of $20 with Egyptian wines (connoisseurs beware, but you can get a passable wine).

For diversion, you can always take the ferry to Aswan and wander through the big bazaar. If that sounds ton tame, you can rent a felucca, those elegani lateen-sailed boats that have moved on a whisper of wind since the days of the pharoahs. They don't make a sound and for a little over the equivalent of $5 an hour you can sail as far as the great river's First Cataract, drifting past the marshy hanks where elegant white ibises nest and hawks soar in cohalt skies. Gulls perch on rocks jutting out of the river and, along some of the embankments
—depending on the water level — you can see hieroglyphics etched there thousands of years

It is a superb way in spend an afternoon and there's no reason you can't ask the hotel to pack you a lunch to take along. Get the felucca pilot to sup at another oasis, this one unpopulated (there are three Nubian villages on Elephantine Island). It is called Kitchener's Island or the botanie gardens, and it was once owned by Lord Kitchener, the British imperi-

Every possible tropical plant is grown there - seedlings come from all over the world and the place is teeming with flowers and buge palm trees whose great leaves make a sound like castanets when the wind comes up.

The island has walkways and benches on which one can sit and rest or read. The air is filled with the smell of flowers, most noticeably honeysuckle. Have the boatman join you at the end of the island and resume your meanderings around the great granite boulders that dot the Nile in the area. You don't have to be a complete slouch on Elephantine Island. There are monuments and remnants of the past — although not on the grand scale of Luxor or Abu Simbel. A small museum displays and quities found locally and there are the remains of three minor temples. They are in rather poor shape. One near the southern end of the island consists essentially of a doorway made of granite and some faded reliefs. At the northern end of the island, there are foundations of a temple built in the second century B.C. The third temple, in better shape than the others, is a modest affair dedicated to Hega-lb, an early ruler of

There are also empty tombs and the remains of a dwelling of a holy man reached by a steep climb. Not much is known about the holy man's dwelling, but if you make the ascent there is a commanding view of water, oasis and

One unusual structure across from the island on the left bank of the Nile is the mausoleum of the Aga Khan who died in 1957. Perhaps best known for his considerable wealth and his philanthropy, the Aga Khan came every winter in the area to be buried up to the neck in hot desen sands, which be claimed helped his rheumatism.

The most pleasant features of my stay at the Oberoi were the feluccas and the long strolls around the hotel's well-kept grounds. There are isolated spois to sit and read, and my favorite memory of the place, the impression that personified an idyll that preceded some arduous touring, is that of an old monk,

He was a tiny man, with a white flowing beard and a long brown cowled cassock. He must have been 80 and spoke seven languages and he said he was on leave from his Carmelite monastery in Spain. Every afternoon he could be seen sitting under his favorite tree with a bottle of beer, reading Penguin paperbacks in English, all of them murder mysteries.

Egyptair, the national airline, flies daily to Aswan from Cairo. On arriving at the Aswan Airport, you take a taxt and ask for the Aswan Oberoi ferry, which is in the center of Aswan. The ferry ride takes three minutes and is free. Arrangements to visit the Island can be made from Cairo through a travel agent, such as Thomas Cook, or through Mena House, a splendid Cairo hotel owned by the Oberol chain. 101982 The New York Times cessive year, a poll of international bankers rates the Oriental Hotel in Bangkok No. 1 in a list of the 40 best hotels in the world. The survey of more than 100 bankers was conducted by the magazine Institutional Investor.

No musical instruments were visible before the concert, just large black speakers. The lights dimmed, listeners husbed and cascading over them to wild polypbony, chromaticism and multiple, shifting rhythms — sometimes with one score layered over another totally different from it — came eight of Conlon Nan-carrow's "Studies for Player Piano."

Yes, player piano. For 35 years, Nancarrow has composed exclusively for the old-fashioned player piano, laboriously hand-punching piano rolls in a suburh of Mexico City and playing them only there on two upright pianos that be has "souped up" to sound more metallic than normal. The tapes played at the IRCAM center here — and in three other concerts in the last month, in Graz and Hall, Austria, and in Cologne — were recorded to Nancarrow's soundproofed studio; he left the pianos at home, jodging them too unwieldy to travel.

Nancarrow (pronounced Nan-CARE-o)
himself has traveled little in the last 40 years. living virtually as a recluse from the international musical scene and in self-imposed exile from the United States, where he was born. For more than three decades he worked steadily in his studio, unknown even to most musicians. Only in the last five years has he won international recognition, most tangihly this year in the form of a $300,000 "gemus" grant from the MacArthur Foundation in Chicago, which puts him in the unusual position of seeming to be a hot new composer at age 70. How to describe Nancarrow's music

"Well, I don't," he said, a few hours before returning to Mexico with his wife, an archaeologist, and their 11-year-old son. He thinks a bit, then adds, smiling, "I wouldn't know how to describe the way it sounds."

Old-fashioned is one way it doesn't.
"Maniacally percussive." "incredibly rich,"
"totally enjoyable," "intense" and "utterly original" are a few terms that composers and musical observers have used recently regarding Nancarrow's work.

Time is the musical element that has always interested me most," he says. That ioterest is reflected in breakneck speed in much of his work, where notes follow each other faster than any human pianist could play them, sometimes so rapidly that they challenge the capacity of the ear to perceive them.

The same almost-obsessive concern with time has led Nancarrow to experiment with complex juxtapositions of tempo relationships in which mathematical coocepts play a crucial part. "If I had started my work later, I almost certainly would have used electronic methods. But I don't work that way and I'm too old to learn," be says, more with satisfaction than with regret Nancarrow radiates confidence that be is doing exactly what he wants to do and, therefore, what be ought to be doing.

Laconic and a loner, be appears to take quier delight to his new role as a Rip Van Winkle of the contemporary musical world. Emerging at an advanced age into the spotlight of public performance, he says he had worked alone simply because "I like it that way."

Nancarrow was born Oct. 27, 1912, in Texarkana, Arkansas, where there was a player piano in his parents' home. He became a jazz trumpeter, an interest evoked by the uproarious honky-tonk style of his early "Studies for Player Piano." and studied music with Walter Piston, Nicolas Slonimsky and Roger Sessions. In 1937, he joined the Lincoln Brigade to fight the Franco forces in the Spanish Civil War. On his return home, he says, he was politically ha-rassed by the U.S. government.

Told he could oot get a passport and unwilling to live as a "second-class citizen," Nancarrow decided to leave the United States. The only countries open to him without a U.S. passport were Canada and Mexico; he chose Mexico, settled there in 1940 and later hecame a Mexican citizen.

Originally Nancarrow composed for conventional instruments, but be became dissatisfied with difficulties in finding musicians to perform his work and, once found, with their frequent inability to play his music exactly as written. The problem was, no human hands could play as fast as I wanted," he observes.

In 1947, he hit upon the player piano as the answer to his demands and has never looked hack. He is now working on "Studies" numbered in the 40s, slowly — a complex fiveminute piece can take as long as a year to compose and punch. The total performance time of his life's work has now reached about five

Does he ever think of composing for different instruments? 'No, not any more," he says. "I'm completely into player pianos." Over the years, whispers about Nancarrow's unusual work reached other composers and a few, like John Cage in the late 1950s, made the trip to his Mexico City studio, the only place it could be heard. Merce Cunningham set a ballet to his music.

The "Studies for Player Piano," however, remained inaccessible and virtually unknown until five years ago, when 1750 Arch Records, a California company, started recording the works under Nancarrow's supervision in his own studio and releasing them accompanied by didactic notes and photographs. Three long-play records are available and a fourth is issued soon.

Nancarrow's personal horizons expanded even more dramatically less than 18 months ago when he was persuaded to return to the United States for the first time since 1947 to take part in the New Music America Festival in San Francisco. That appearance was fol-lowed by another at the Cahrillo Music Festival in California last summer, and this fall's European tour.
Conion Nancarrow, the former recluse, appears comfortable hasking in acclaim from his colleagues and the public. So why did he wait so long to go before audiences with his music? He smiles, considers and answers with his bint of an Arkansas drawl. "I didn't realize there would be this toterest in it."

Invitation to the Dance in Havana

by Martin Bernheimer

AVANA - The iovitation to the Eighth International Festival of Ballet in Havana promised hig things. Not just the usual festive offerings by the enterprising National Ballet of Cuba and international guest stars, but opportunities to see Alicia Alonso, the fahled Alicia Alonso, in a variety of new roles choreographed especially for ber at career twilight.

There were vague promises of other totrigu-ing prospects, too. The previous festival, in 1980, featured a visit by the Bolshoi Ballet. It certainly would be easier to see this, or any other, Russian company these days in Castro's Cuba than to Reagan's America. Visions of the mighty. long-lost Kirov, of a valedictory encounter with a Maya Plisetskaya or Vladimir Vasiliev and of other forbidden balletic fruit danced like sugar plums to the critical head.

Furthermore, Havana promised some intriguing oovelties of its own. There would be, at the very least, a vast array of works by Latin-'United States, a special series of master classes offered by the stellar staff of the Cuban Ballet, definitive lecture-demonstrations on the elusive Romantic style, related symposia and exhibits and, of course, chances to observe an undisputed prima ballerina asssoluta at work in ber own extraordinary creative environment.

A similar trip four years ago resulted in revelations, for obvious sociopolitical reasons as well as artistic ooes. Now the Cuban festival seemed even more enticing.

Alonso, after all, was celebrating her 50th year on the stage. Although she did not like to talk about retirement, it did oot seem likely that she would go on dancing forever. Well, even if she did go on dancing forever, Havana would present her to her most famous, most celebrated, role: Giselle. And this, it was strongly rumored, could well be her last Giselle anywhere.

Yes, I wired Havana. I would be happy to attend. Yes. please.

Getting there is not half the fun. Although Cuba lies a mere 90 miles from Miami, no commercial airline flies there from the United States. Air travel to Havana entails a detour to Mexico City or Toronto. Flights are infrequent and connections inconvenient. I arrived at Jose Marti Airport weary and bleary after hasty visits to the airports of Mazatlán, Mexico City and Mérida. My luggage, having halked at one of the transfers, showed up four days later. Missing clothing poses something of a problem because in Cuba, even in the special botel shops that accept only dollars and cater only to tourists, such hasic luxuries as shirts and ties are not easily acquired. Luckily, the Cuhans do not stand much on formality, even at internacional festivals. All the visitors to the festival — journalists, dancers, official observers, guest technicians — are billeted in the same hotel, this year the Habana Riviera. Camaraderie between people who might barely speak to one another elsewhere becomes a matter of casual course here. We all share the same dining room, the same hardly changing hut relatively lavish buffet at all three meals. The buffet makes us the uncomfortable envy of the local population. The uncomplaining Cubans still endure short supplies, long lines in most stores, and rationing of many basic foods.

The Habana Riviera is, without question, the most elegant botel to town, even if its elegance is faded. It looms above the restless ocean across the street, boasts a buge saltwater swimming pool and opulent public rooms. It was built by Americans, largely for Americans, sbortly before the revolution. It is pretty shabby and rundown today.

The opening of the ballet festival is, essentially, one long bow for Alicia Alonso. It entails speeches, a parade to the fontlights by the entire company and a rather tedious, arbitrary collection of pas de deux adagios, minus the spark of flashy variations and climactic co-

Fidel Castro, who graced the center seat to the first tier of the lovely old Gran Teatro Garcia Lorca in 1978, is absent this time. His place is taken by the minister of culture. The generally unruly, invitation-only crowd to the notquite-full house snaps to attention when a tape blares the Cuban national anthem.

The news is out. The Russians are not coming. Not in large groups, anyway. No Bolshoi, no Kirov, oot even an ensemble from Minsk. But there are small, reasonable facsimiles. Olga Lepeshinskaya is here. This much-bon-ored, nearly legendary Peoples' Artist of the U.S.S.R., this erstwhile rival of Ulanova at the Bolshoi, this living piece of Soviet ballet history, is very much a presence. Raisa Struchkova, another admired Bolshoi ballerina of another era, is here, too. She is younger, tougher than Lepeshinskaya, more forbidding. When vari-ous festival dancers attempt "The Flames of Paris" or "Spring Waters" or similar acrobatic pas de deux in her presence, everyone watches Struchkova for signs of approval.

Two pairs of young Russian dancers will grace the assorted pas-de-deux orgies at the Teatro Mella, an unabashed Art-Deco theater to the once-fashionable Vedado suhurh. It used to be a movic palace. The Kirov has sent Tatiana Berezhnaya and her husband Sergei Berezhnoi. The Bolshoi promises Nina Anani-ashvily, an 18-year-old wonder, and her older partner, Andris Marisovich Liepa.

Lepeshinskaya and Struchkova rigorously rehearse both couples for their Havana ap-pearances, and act as chaperones between fildly cheered pas de deux.

The performing pattern becomes clear on the second night. The Teatro Mella houses high-class variety shows: short hallets, stellar ducts, folk dance extravaganzas, all with taped orchestral accompaniment. Sometimes these shows play provincial theaters outside Havana. The huge and cold Teatro Nacional on Revolution Square, built to 1979, is the lo-cale for the major full-length ballets: this year, "Sleeping Beauty." "Coppelia" and "Swan Lake." The orchestra in the amplified pit is the Havana Symphony, slightly—hut only slightly—better than the gang at a U.S. high school. The most prestigious events take place at the Garcia Lorca, where Alicia dances. where the endless series of hig premieres takes place, where hallet is not just vital but glamorous, too.

Oo most nights, any curious balletomane worth his fanaticism would want to be io all three places at the same time,

A typical night at the Mella: Josefina Mendez, the most refined of Cuba's senior ballerinas, brings muted rapture to the "Les Sylphides" pas de deux, partnered stylishly by Jose Zamorano. An cager but less than virtuosic young duo from Panama, Gloria Barrios and Guillermo Tribaldos, plunge effortfully through Messerer's "Spring Waters." The first bona-fide festival favorites, and surprises, emerge as Ann Maric D'Angelo of the United States and Joban Renvall of Sweden via New is all pep and bravara strength; he comple-ments her with comparable force modified by a trace of danseur noble sugvity.

There is more, but a quick trip to the Garcia Lorca brings us to a world premiere — the first of three for Alicia this week. Alberto Mendez, Cuba's finest choreographer, has created a ballet for the local diva called, appropriately, "La Diva." It pretends, to a promisiog pretense, to examine the life, loves and tragedy of Maria Callas, but ends up doing no such Cuba never saw Callas, Chances are, neither did Mendez nor Alonso. The ballet is an odd compendium of shreds and patches from previous successes, a muddle of good and bad ideas, a distortion of esthetic values.

"La Diva" unwittingly raises some funda-mental questions regarding Alicia Alonso. Is she, at this stage of her unparalleled career, the tempestuous dancing actress her latest vehicles want to suggest? Does a great classical dancer in her declining years automatically become a tragedienne? Does a lessening of physical resources necessarily support an increase in dra-

In her glorious prime, Alicia Alonso excelled in cool-and-glittery roles, in sweet-and-sympathetic roles, in fresh-and-impish roles. She could be charming. She could be funny. She could be adorable. As Giselle, she could be ashe to will ashe to be could be ashe to will be a she could be pathetic, vulnerable, ethereal.

Now she is attempting to portray the world's most flamboyant singing-actress, and within a few days she will turn to the turbulent passions of Cathy in "Wuthering Heights" and the heroic violence of Medea. Alicia Alonso wants to be higger than life. The dangers are obvious, and fascinating. This is the first of two articles.

Ireland Adds to Its Artistic Elite

by Elgy Gillespie

UBLIN - lo Celtic prehistory, poets and historians, the aes dana, were a separate caste with their own ways and assembly. A year and a half ago, the recently unseated Irish prime minister, Charles Haughey, invited Irish artists to apply for membership to a new elite, the Aosdana, or men of art. The idea was to elect a group of not more than 150 artists born to Ireland (or based here for more than five years) both to give them a forum and to allow them to devote all their time to their art.

Last Christmas the first 96 members joined. Eight more are expected to be announced soon, and early next year the new assembly meets for the first time to elect the remaining members. The new members living in the Irish Republic can now apply for a crues or grant of £4,000 a year, payable quarterly. A dozen or so already have.

Some people have described this concept as a cross between the Académic Française and a writer's union (with other arts thrown to for good measure), or as a way of paying wages to artists. The Irish Arts Council, which designed the movement and administers it, prefers to see it as "an affiliation of creative artists which provides financial support and special hon-

The project bears the hallmark of Haughey's imagination. The former "real Taoiseach," or leader, as he liked to call himself, saw himself as a patron of the arts and a resurrector of the grace of early Celoc ways. Haughey was also responsible for introducing tax-exile status in Ireland for writers and artists, attracting such writers as Len Deighton, Michael Holroyd and, briefly, Gore Vidal.

It is debatable whether this measure had much impact on Irish artists, since few earned enough to be taxed in the first place. More is heard of departures, like that of Frederick Forsyth, than of new arrivals like John Gardner. who resurrected James Bond. Yet there have been very few critics of the tax-exile plan; perhaps because the public recognizes that it costs

Aosdana is potentially far more controversial, despite its high-minded intentions. One is-sue is the fact that many of the writers and artists chosen are not particularly eminent, though some worthies — Liam O'Flaherty, Sean O'Faolain, Seamus Heaney, Jennifer Johnston - are included. Many Irish artists did not apply, and the first 96 members did not include some well-known literary figures: Edna O'Brien, John Banville, Hugh Leonard, Stewart Parker, T.P. Flanagan, Eugene McCabe, Thomas Kinsella, Tom Kilroy, Julia Among the missing also are some distin1.64 1.728 1.728 1.729 1.729 1.729 1.44 1.60 1.730 1.7

There are also some writers who, presumably, will not be playing a very active part when the Aosdana assembly meets next year. Samuel Beckett is alive and well but living in Paris. Louis le Brocquy and his wife Anne Madden, both on the list, live in the south of France. (Le Brocquy's sister Melanie le Brocquy is another member — families and married couples are something of a feature of the list.) Some of the first artists to receive the enuals do not, as stipulated in the ground rules of the Irish Arts Couocil, live in the republic.

But for Anthony Cronin, the writer and journalist ("Dead as Doornails," "Identity Papers"! who inspired the notion of Aosdana af-ter a life spent with such writers as Patrick Kavanagh and Brendan Behan in a vain attempt to eat and drink art, it is a little piece of George R. Baker has resigned as executive vice president and head of general banking services at Continental Illinois.

Continental refused to comment on a Washington Post report that said Mr. Baker was a casualty of last July's failure of Oklahoma City-based Penn Square. Chicago-based Continental bought more than $1 billion in loans from the failed Perin Square Bank, of which the bank estimates $220 million are bad.

Brazil to Seek IMF Loan

Brazil announced Thursday plans to borrow $500 million from the International Monetary Fund to help pay back its foreign debts, fast approaching the $90-billion mark, Reuters reported from Rio

The arrangement Brazil hopes to use is designed to compensate countries for declines to the prices of their exports and does not impose any restrictions on economic policy. Several other Latin American countries with foreign pay-ments problems have taken advantage of the same IMF arrangement

Finaoce Minister Ernaoe Galveas told reporters: "We are preparing the figures... When all is ready, I will apply and ask for the $500 million I m enritled to because my exports have fallen."

The announcement ended weeks of speculation that Brazil would apply to the fund. Bankers said the withdrawal of many foreign hanks from Latin American lending over the last few mooths made the move ioevitable.

Foreign loans for periods longer than a year began to dry up follow-ing reports of the Mexican debt crisis, and Brazil found itself forced into short term borrowing which it had long resisted.

In the last few weeks the foreign debt due for repayment within 12 mooths is believed to have risen to $16 billion from $12 billion at the end of last year.

Mexico's Creditors Scramble to Avoid Damage to Earnings private-sector loans as non-accural

By Marrin Baron

Los Angeles Times Service NEW YORK - Mexico's foreign lenders are scrambling against a Dec. 31 deadline to avoid a situa-tion in which about $13 billion in loans to that nation's private businesses would be declared "non-accrual." Such a development would damage the foreign banks' earn-ings and sow further unease about Mexico's financial condition, bankers fear.

Loans are considered to be nonaccruing if interest is not received for 60 days to 90 days, depending on the government entity that issued the bank charter. Once loans are placed in non-accrual status, unpaid interest payments are exduded from bank earnings.

visory committee on Mexico. If the private-sector debt problem is not resolved at least tentatively before Dec. 31, the non-accrual loans could depress the prof-, its of some medium-sized banks in a major way. Moreover, some banks could be forced to restate their earnings for the third quarter. While large institutions such as Citibank, Chase Manhattan Bank and Bank of America would be affected somewhat, the most severe proportional impact would fall on regional institutions in Texas that lent heavily to Mexican businesses. If the Mexican private-sector loans are declared non-accrual, it would be the first major reflection of Mexico's loan problems in the earnings statements of U.S. lend-

The executives of some banks are concerned about how sharebolders, stock analysts and the public would interpret such a development. There is every reason to believe that the private-sector loans ultimately will be repaid, bankers said. But the executives are worried that the public may consider non-accrual status tantamount to default when, in fact, it is not.

The central problem is that almost no interest has been paid since Sept. EC Steel Cuts Backed; Details Still Unsettled

By Philip Stephens

ELSINORE Denmark — The European Community's industry ministers agreed Thursday on the need for a further round of sweeping cuts in EC steelmaking capacity, but they were unable to agree on where the ax should fall. "Without a reduction in capacity, the European steel industry cannot survive," Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff of West Germany said after a day of informal ministerial talks bere.

The ministers also pledged to take urgent action to end a price war that has added to EC steelmakers' huge losses. Mr. Lambsdorff's view was ech-

The man with exceptional goals needs an exceptional bank.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknotes, money market transactions and precious metals. Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the USA, where our subsidiary, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 25 largest banks. It also includes a number of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for clients. What's more, we keep our back-office systems running abreast of our business. You may not notice this directly, but it shows up in quicker decisions and fewer errors.

While we move fast in serving our clients, we're distinctly traditionalist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also well-diversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

And when the market is Turkey, that means Interbank: Turkey's leading wholesale bank.

Founded in 1888 as Banque de Salonique, we've specialized since then in import/export finance - now Turkey's fastest-developing economic sector.

Some 1982 examples: Interbank finances 20% of Turkey's oil imports from North Africa.

We recently handled the two largest I/c's covering transit exports from the U.K. and West Germany through Turkey to the Middle East.

And we are one of the only two Turkish banks participating in the largest guarantee facility syndicate for Turkish contractors in Saudi Arabia.

We're strong. We're growing fast. We're highly profitable. And we work only with the top 100 companies and government agencies in Turkey.

Our outstanding financial results reflect our highvolume transactions and low overheads.

Intel to Cut Salaries by up to 10%

SANTA CLARA California (AP) — Salaries for the 20,000 employees of Intel Corp. will be cut by up to 10 percent during 1983 because of sagging semiconductor sales, the company has announced. The reductions will be graduated, with workers at the bottom of the pay scale facing pay cuts of only 3.4 percent.

The semiconductor industry has experienced unusually rapid price erosion as a result of the recession," the company's chairman, Gordon E. Moore, said Wednesday, "Revenue growth has not kept pace. Without this program, it is unlikely in the near term that we would return to-profitability levels necessary to sustain growth."

IH Pleads Guilty to Bribery Charge

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — International Harvester has pleaded guilty to a criminal charge of conspiring to bribe officials of Pemer, Mexico's state oil company, to obtain sales of gas turbine compression equipment, the Justice Department said Thursday.

Congressmen Warn Against Tax Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Republican leaders told President Reagan Thursday that he could not get the votes to make next year's income tax cut effective earlier, as some presidential advisers have proposed as a way of spurriog the economy.

Speaking with reporters after they met with the president, both Senate GOP leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois appeared unenthusiastic about the chances Congress would approve moving up to Jan. 1 the income tax ent now scheduled for July 1. As the president's advisers fought over the merits of speeding up the tax cut, the president said Wednesday that he had not made up his mind whether to seek congressional approval of the

ATT Files for 15-Million-Share Offer

NEW YORK (Reuters) - American Telephone & Telegraph filed Thursday with the Securities and Exchange Commission for a public nearby Troy, a Detroit suburb, offering of 15 million shares. The company said Wednesday that it and it also wants to build a manu-pliering of 15 million shares. The company said Wednesday that it and it also wants to build a manuflanned to raise up to $1 billion through the offering.

ATT said underwriters will have an option to buy up to 1.5 million additional shares to cover any over-allouncers. The company said the offering will be negotiated with a nationwide group of investment banking firms led by Morgan Stanley, Blythe Eastman, Paine Webber, First Boston, Merrill Lynch White Weld Capital Markets Group and Salomon Brothers.

[Analysts said Wednesday that since ATT already had 876 million common shares spread among more than 3 million shareholders, the new offering would not appreciably dilute the value of the existing shares, The New York Times reported. "The dilution from selling this amount of stock is peanuts — less than 20 cents a share," said James M. McCabe, an analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds.]

Hong Kong Firm Denies Reports Of Debt Troubles

HONG KONG — A top official of Carrian lovestments on Thursday denied local press reports that the company had insufficient funds to meet its debt payments through the end of next year.

The company's executive director, Bentley Ho, said the company was suffering liquidity problems caused by default in payment by lo-cal property companies that had been badly hurt by the growing fears over the colony's fu-ture ooce its lease to Britain expires in 1997. But he said Carrian would make its payments.

Carrian, a property company with interests in transportation, tourism and other areas, is one of Hong Koog's largest diversified compa-

Mr. Ho said in an interview that loan repayment and interest due before the end of next year totals 610.7 million Hong Kong dollars ($91.8 million), leaving outstanding debt thereafter of about 2.5 billion Hong Kong dollars, most of it loog-term.

The recent assertions in the press were based on a confidential document from Carrian's ficancial advisers for distribution to the compaoy's 35 creditors.

Mr. Ho confirmed that the document had been circulated but disputed the conclusions drawn by the press. He said Carrian is re-trenching to meet its debts but will not dump assets at a substantial loss.

The document makes oo mention of a final dividend for 1982, but Mr. Ho said it is possible there will be a cash dividend oext yea In September, the company declared a 12-cent interim dividend, but on Oct. 26 it announced a one-for-10 bonus issue instead The document says profit for the nine months ended Sept. 30 was 210.62 million Hoog Kong dollars, compared with 626.15 million in the whole of 1981, on turnover of 632.11 million Hoog Kong dollars, against 1.49 hillion

Mr. Ho said local property companies had defaulted on payment of about 408 million Hong Kong dollars. The unexpected default and the write-down of the company's net asset value — to 2.55 billion Hong Kong dollars on Oct. 24 from 3.72 billion on Sept. 30 — follows

The Carrian executive said the company expects 305.7 million Hong Kong dollars in the second quarter of 1983 from the sale of a 30percent stake in a residential development in Manila and from the sale of a 50-percent interest in a joint venture with Hongkoog Land involving properties in Hong Kong.

the fall in local property and share prices prompted by concerns on the status of the col-

Mr. Ho said Carrian probably will dispose of overseas assets rather than local assets, in view of currency gains. Carrian projects a cash inflow between now and the end of next year of 1.51 billion Hong Kong dollars, and an outflow of 1.42 billion.

I do not high it may be a seem old chough to say. I do not high it may be a seem of the say. seem odd enough to say. I do not think it my vocation. But you will see that I will do something or other—the times and fortune permitting—that, like the cosmogony, or creation of the world, will puzzle the philosophers of all ages.

Byton's real vocation, of course, was his invention of a self; in the end.

poetry was more a means than an end for him — it was one of the many ways in which he fashioned, with consummate artistry and charm, a might in which to clothe his life. By turns brave and self-pitying, vain and generous, willfully melancholy and industriously decadent, "the grand Napoleon of the realms of rhyme" — as he called himself in "Don Juan" — also possessed an unerring talent for the grand vesture.

He swam the Hellespont, used a skull as a drinking cup, threatened suicide when peeved, carried on a scandalous affair with his half sister and lamented the passage of youth at the age of 23. The beautiful but lame pilgrim of "Childe Harold" became a legend overnight, and women, by the dozen, succumbed to his dangerous charm. His gift for self-promotion, combined with the romantic lineaments of his life — including heroic data the contraction. death at the age of 36, helping the Greeks fight for liberation — has made him a favorite subject of biogra-

The first, if not most objective, portraitist of the poet was Byron himself.
Although his memoirs were hastily consigned to the fireplace by friends fearful of scandal, his journals and letters — which have been assembled in an II-volume collection by the scholar Leslie A. Marchand — comprise an extraordinary record of his life, Marchand has now distilled the most interesting of those writings in "Lord Byron," a collection for the general reader. It serves not only as a fascinating introduction to the poet's life hut also as a felicitous counter-point to his art.

While the poems purvey an image of Byron as a brooding egotist, the letters, written mainly to entertain his friends, disguise his melancholia with flippunt aphorisms and sardonic ob-servations. There are mecking com-plaints about his irresistible allure to women ("I have been more ravished myself than anybody since the Trojan war"), catty dismissals of other poets (Keats' verse "is a sort of mental masturbation") and nervous philosophic assertions ("the great object of life is Sensation"). The journals, though also sparked with ironic wit, tend to be more introspective, revealing how re-markably divided the poet's consciousness was — between the need for solitude and an audience, between hedonism and guilt, cynicism and sentimentality.

For all their eager confessions, however. Byron's self-assessments were not entirely spontaneous, and in many cases, served as facetious advertisements for himself. Just as his snobbish pronouncements and dandi-fied poses belied the insecurities of a hoy born with a clubfoot and little inherited wealth, so did his boastful accounts of womanizing conceal a sexul-al ambivalence and fear of the oppo-site sex. What is needed to put By-ron's own writing in perspective is a judicious account of his life, such as Marchand's excellent biography, "Byron. a Portrait, which is available in paperback from the University of Chicago Press.

Frederic Raphael's new study; "Byron." unfortunately, does not come close to fulfdling this need. It lacks both the critical details of Marchand's biography and the evocative sense of the Regency period contained in Peter Quennell's life. Raphael, who is better fromm as the creenwriter of "These known as the screenwriter of Dar-ling" and "Two for the Road," makes little attempt to distinguish fact from fiction — he is content to employ such phrases as "legend promises" and folklore claims" - and displays 6 laughable penchant for shaw-business metaphors, comparing Byren to a rock star and Hollywood celebrity.

To make matters worse, his prose is frequently maonered and filled with truisms and cliches, "Byron became unmistakably Byronic in the last weeks of 1809," Raphaet writes, Or, describing one of the poet's mistresses, he declares, "Lady Oxford was autumnal, but autumn that year proved circularly enchanting." proved singularly enchanting."

Even such ungainly passages, how-ever, cannot entirely dimioish the essential drama of Byron's life, and we are left, in the end, with a sense of just what a prophetic figure be was. Though his verse has fallen somewhat out of fashion, the poet - conflicted, doom-ridden, obsessed with youth and unflaggingly self-absorbed mains peculiarly modern.

A Vote to Fire Players' Negotiator

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

NEW YORK --- When the 1,500 players in the National Football League vote next Tuesday to ratify the labor treaty with the elub owners, they should also vote to dismiss Ed Garvey, their misguided lead-tn a sense, a vote for ratification of the collectivebargaining agreement is really a vote against Garvey, who settled on Nov. 16 for virtually what the owners had offered on Sept. 8, two weeks before the beginning of o strike that would last eight weeks. In the fioal accord of $1.3 billion over the next four years plus $60 million in bonuses this season, some of the money had been rearranged. But the total package, including previously negotiated salaries and benefits for this seasoo, was not much different from the Sept. 8 offer of $1.6 billion over five years.

"Even playing only nine games this season, we will spend just under $1.6 billion over the five years," says Steve Gutman of the NFL Management Council. You could throw a hat over the two offers."

Or a belmet. For this, the players were on strike for cight weeks while Garvey pretended to be Leeb Walesa in a buttoo-down shirt. For months, Garvey had shouted that the players' demand for a percentage of the owners' gross income was "etched in stone." But on Sept. 17, shortly after the union had set a strike deadline, he dropped this demand, which he had used to unite the players.

Garvey now contends that the players will collect "pretty close to" 55 percent of the projected gross, the level he had set as a jump-off point for negotiations. But according to Jim Miller of the Management Council, the settlement equals only 46 percent, up slightly from nearly 44 percent in the previous

Having dropped the percentage-of-gross proposal two months ago, Garvey demanded a package includ-ing 50 percent of the TV revenue, a concept to provide the players a share of the cable-TV bonanza that is sure to develop for the NFL during the next decade. But he also failed to obtain any concession from the owners in that area.

"Nothing in the contract," says Steve Gutman, "is tied to percentages of income." Nor did Garvey hance player salaries: free agency.

Now that the union bas caved in because of Garvey's goofs, the moment of truth is in focus, the moment when Garvey and the players on the union's executive committee realized that the Management Council was not hluffing, the moment when many other players around the NFL realized that Garvey had been bluffing.

That momeot occurred a week ago last Saturday morning when Jack Donlan of the Management

Council walked away from Garvey in a meeting room at the Loews Summit hotel. The day before, Donlan had been ready to break off the negotiations. Sam Kagel, the 73-year-old mediator, was about to return to his San Francisco home. He bad a reservation on an early-evening flight. But that afternoon Garvey pleaded with Kagel to bring Donlan back to the bargaining table Saturday moming.

"I'll come back," Donlan replied, "ooly if there's a chance for some significant movement tomorrow on the wage-scale issue.

Garvey agreed. Kagel stayed at the Loews Summit rather than leave for that early-evening flight out of Kennedy International Airport. Saturday morning Donlan returned to the bargain-ing table under the assumption that Garvey was there to talk about a significant change in the wage-scale issue. Instead, the players association's executive director started talking about insurance.

"I thought we were going to talk about a wage scale," Donlan snapped "not insurance."

Donlan walked out. Kagel walked out too, soon to take another flight to San Francisco, the second time he had departed in disgust at the non-oegotiations. Suddenly the players knew that the owners were willing to let the season evaporate rather than surrender. That's when players on five of the 28 teams voted to accept the owners' last proposal.

Garvey got the message, He reached out for Dan Rooney, the president of the Pittsburgh Steelers, and also for Paul Martha, once a Steeler defensive back and now a vice president and general counsel of the San Francisco 49ers, who in other years had arbitrat-ed nooinjury grievances filed by the players association against the owners.

Dan Rooney sat in on the final negotiations, the only owner to be at the table at any point in the dispute. Paul Martha emerged as an important go-between, the equivalent of a UN observer. Hour by hour, Garvey capitulated. The season, or what's left of it, was saved. Granted, a nine-game schedule, with an expanded 16-team Super Bowl tour-nament format, is not so credible as the established 16-game schedule. But it's better than the two-game schedule that the strike nearly created, another of Garvey's blunders.

players who are vested in the NFL pension plan to receive credit for another year of service.

Three games are necessary for a player to receive credit for a year's service, but only two games had been played before the strike began. If this season had not resumed, cone of the players would have received pension credit for 1982 — another reason why the players eventually decided their own destiny rather than permit Garvey to challenge the owners

Steve Boros to Manage A's, Replacing Popular Martin The Associated Press three seasons as manager. Atten-OAKLAND — Steve Boros, a dance records were established in 46-year-old baseball coach for the 1981 and 1982. Mootreal Expos who was managing in the low minor leagues three years ago, has been named to manage the Oakland A's. He replaces Billy Martin, who was fired last month.

The elub president, Roy Eisenhardt, called Boros "the best person for this job at this time in this community.

Boros, who left college 25 years ago to begin a career in profession-al baseball, says he became a major league manager because of the moral support of those who en-couraged him not to give up.

There were rough times, Boros said. They included just seveo years in the majors as an infielder with the Detroit Tigers and Chicago Cubs, many bus trips in the mi-oors as a player and manager and the experience of being fired from the Kansas City Royals' coaching staff when that team cleaned house three years ago.

"But so many good people were pulling for me, men like Whitey Herzog, John MeHale and Jack McKeon. That kept me going." Boros said Wednesday.

McHale, oow president of the Montreal Expos, strongly recom-mended Boros when Eisenhardt asked permission to interview him. McHale also was instrumental in signing Boros, who had plnyed at the University of Michigan, to his first contract 25 years ago.

But looking back at 1958, Boros thanked another man: Billy Mar-

"I was an aspiring young infield-er with the Detroit Tigers, and Bil-ly Martin took me aside to show me how to make the double play," Boros recalled. "He did that knowing full well that sometime down the road I might be competing with him. That made a tremendous impression on me. I've always bad great respect for Billy."

Boros's best year as a player was 1961, when as the regular Tiger third-baseman he hit .270 and batted in 62 runs.

Martin, who grew up in nearby
Berkeley and played mimor league ball in Oakland, was immensely popular with the A's fans in his

The A's woo the American League West title in 1981, but they dropped to fifth this year, and Eisenhardt went looking for a fresh face. Only one former major league manager, Jim Fregosi, was considered.

One man contacted was Willie Stargell, the former star of the Pittsburgh Pirates. "He was very interested, but he had commitments in Pittsburgh for next year," said Eisenhardt, who wanted not only a man with a good baseball mind, but also one wbo understood the modern athlike young people." Boros said. "Even though they may use hair dryers and I just bave to stand under a t00-watt bulb, I sympa thize with them, respect them and like them."

OBSERVER

The Scrutable Kremlin

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — The change of government in Moscow confronts Washington either with great peril or rich opportunity. though possibly neither. Only time

This is why we must be patient. Nor must we relax our guard. At the same time, our posture must be absolutely correct. As President Reagan has pointed out, it takes two to tango, but the correct posture for doing the tango is quite different from the posture that musi be assumed for doing the rumba.

Will the new Soviet leadership be willing to tango with President Reagan? Or will it try to force him to rumba? Only time will tell.

Thus, the president is receiving conflicting advice from his foreign policy advisers. Some say he must stick adamantly to his request for a tango; others urge him to be prepared to compromise by offering to do the fox-trot. One thing is clear; It takes two to fox-trot.

Another thing is also clear: Leonid Brezhnev is dead. An era has ended. It was the Brezhnev era. It followed the Khrushchev era, which followed the Stalin era, and oow there is a new era.

But is there? It is quite possible that the new government is merely a transitional arrangement. Perhaps in six mooths or a year from oow there will be another new government after the transition ends If so, will the present period be known as the transitional era? Only time will tell.

And what of Yuri Andropov, Brezhnev's apparent successor? The significance of his rise to power may lie in the relative simplicity of the spelling of his name. Andropov is easier to spell than Brezhwhich was much easier to spell than Khrushchev, a name that drove journalists up the wall in despair.

Is it possible that the easier-tospell Andropov's victory means that journalists now hold the cootrolling power in the Soviet power structure? Only time will tell.

One thing is clear, however: Andropov formerly beaded the famous Soviet espionage agency re-ferred to in the West as "the dreaded KGB." Is this wby Reagan appointed Vice President

Bush to represent him at the official obsequies in Moscow? Bush formerly beaded the famous American espionage agency referred to in the East as "the evil CIA." Was Rengan, with his taste for the theatrical, amusing bimself by staging a real-life confrontation between George Smiley and Kar-

What did Andropov think as he gazed across the bier and saw his old American counterpart, Busb? Did be say to himself, "If I'd been horn American 1'd never have climbed any higher than vice president and would have spent my best years going to funerals"? Only time will tell.

Ooe thing, however, is clear: Reagan either made a brilliant decisioo by oot atteoding the funeral. or made an extraordinarily stupid mistake, unless - as also seems — it wouldn't have mattered whether be went or not

This leaves the question of Af-ghanistan still unanswered, though much has been made of the significance of the decision to release Lech Walesa from Polish imprisonment at this very moment in history. We have either seen a strong signal of veiled Soviet intentions bere, or one of those everyday accidents of timing that make life so difficult for us students of Soviet affairs. 1, for ooe, am reluctant to answer the question. "Whither Soviet relations with Poland?" Only time will tell.

One thing is perfectly clear, how-ever: The Soviet bosses astonished everyone by the speed with which they selected Andropov to succeed

Brezhnev. The implications here cannot be glossed over easily. It is far too obvious that Andropov either pulled off a strong-armed political coup in outmaneuvering his competitors for the job, or was part of a smooth transfer of power that had been jointly planned by the party bosses before Brezhnev's death, or possibly had the job foisted oo him when everybody else refused to ac-

If this last was the case, why did everyone refuse to accept it? Was it because all the other party bosses had been scared by their predecessors' inability to grow corn and feared being jeered at when they, too, tried to grow corn. and failed? Does Yuri Andropov know the secret of making corn grow? Only time will tell.

The DeBolts and Their 20 Children

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Dorothy and Robert Dapart and Robert DeBolt have 20 children. "When we left home, it was 20," says Robert DeBolt, "but it might be more."

Actually, only seven live in the DeBolt home in Piedmont, California, near San Francisco. It is a large, old, three-story house. "It has seven bedrooms, but more importantly it has six bathrooms," says Robert DeBoit. The largest number of children in the bouse at one time was 16.

Five are from Dorothy De-Bolt's previous marriage. One is from Robert DeBolt's previous marriage. The remaining 14 were adopted.

Some of the adopted children are paraplegic or have other physical handicaps. Some are blind, some have a combination of problems. With my first hus-band, we had four healthy children born to us in four years."
Dorothy DeBolt says. "We felt very blessed. We didn't have much money but we had other things. We felt the need to say God, thank you, we're lucky.' We decided to show it by adopting children."

They begao by adopting unwanted children — those left in hospitals or shottled through foster homes. In the 27 years since, Dorothy DeBolt and her second busband, Robert, have started an agency — Aid to Adoption of Special Kids — to facilitate adoption of hard-to-place children, and they have made careers out speaking on bow they have raised their own family.

Dorothy DeBolt has received the 1982 "Endow a Dream" Award from the W. Ciement and Jessie V. Stone Foundation. It carries a $50,000 grant and honors "an individual, who through his or her own positive mental attitude, has overcome adversity and gone on 10 make significant contributions to the betterment of humanity.

The DeBolts take turns telling anecdotes about the children. She is tall and slim, with high cheek-bones. He has gray hair, thick eyebrows and a strong face. A civil engineer, he gave up his job as president of an Oakland constructioo company to help start the adoption agency. "I became a corporate dropout," he says. Their $50.000-a-year iocome comes from lecture tours. She is 58. He is 51. "She didn't marry me," he says, "She adopted me."

Dorothy DeBolt already had given birth to five children and adopted two Amerasian children when her first husband died. With life insurance money, she put a down payment on the house in Piedmont. She was making $775 a month. "We were all working," she said. "I was working part-time, teaching piano and speaking. I begged service clobs to let me speak. Then I began speaking to clubs with budgets — interfamily relations, parenting, a career and mothering.

Then she got a call from an organization trying to place severely wounded Vietnamese children. "A woman asked if I could recruit families for these two 14year-olds." She took them in.

Two months later, with nine children, she met Robert DeBolt. "She was a doll," he says. "It was a blind date. The man who owned the company I ran -- his wife was an avocational matchmaker . . . She probably fixed me up on 110 dates. I told her,

'No more.' I really hated to hear the phone ring — I thought it was Jean with another body. Then she asked me to take a friend of herto a Christmas party they were having. Jean said to me, 'Ted says he thinks she might be too much for you.' I said. 'What'!'

"Here's what she did to me." says Dorothy DeBolt with a grin. "Jean called and said, I know you don't ordinarily do this, but I'd love you to meet this guy. He's a lovely man, good with kids." She said. The fixed him up with a lot of nice ladies, but what he wants is someone intelligent. If she'd said be wanted a sery broad. I would have said 'No woy

"What she really fixed me up with was a sexy, intelligent wom-an," says Robert DeBolt. "Ahhh, thank you, darling." she says.

After the DeBolts were mar-ried, they moved into the Piedmont house. The reaction to Pied-mont had been mixed since Dorothy DeBolt had arrived. "My immediate neighbor was lovely, others weren't so sure . . . It was the Vietnam war and I had these Amerasian children." She found hate notes in her mailbox.

But then it came full circle," she says. "After people realized what we were doing, they really tried to help." And the local school system, the DeBolts say, supported what they were doing from the start.

Their family has been a success, they say, but it has not been without problems.

"We had a tendency to scold and say 'You're bad,' instead of saying, "You're such a good child. Why would you do such a dumb "We have a tendency to underestimate the adaptability of children," says Robert DeBolt.

"These children can come from some of the damnedest backgrounds, and they can adjust."

One child they adopted together was J.R. — 10 years old, wheel-chair-bound, blind, 40 pounds overweight from having been treated as a vegetable and stuffed with food in one v porary home after another. "But his greatest handicap was his lack of self-essays Dorothy DeBolt. "The first time he walked on crutches, he did it for me as a Mother's Day gift. He would only do things like that for uthers, But now, be's so motivated he's driving us crazy," Today, he is 18, walking with braces and crutches. slimmed down, in 10th grade, an honor student and secretary of the student body.

Robert and Dorothy DeBolt

There is a daughter, Karen — black, born without legs and arms. Karen, 16, who uses artifi-cial limbs, walks eight blocks to high school and was voted outstanding musician at her school (she plays the marimba).

But there also are problems that more typical households have: Everyone must have assigned chores or nothing gets done. There are no babysitters. and a cleaning woman comes only occasionally. "She's there a few hours and her eyes glaze over." says Dorothy DeBolt.

They always eat dinner together - at two tables pushed together when necessary. And they try to talk about the problems. "We've had kids experiment with marijuana," says Dorothy De-"We're not going to say we don't. But no one's gone off the deep end. They all have their problems, their fears, their crushes on hoys, whether they're paraplegic or not. But I tell my kids, You're so much luckier than I was." I was so boy crazy, so moody. I don't know how my mother put up with me."
